SOCIETY FOR THE SCIENTIFIC STUDY OF RELIGION CALL FOR PAPERS
2022 Annual Meeting | November 11-13, 2022 | Renaissance Baltimore Harbor Place Hotel, Maryland

Religion, Racial Unrest and Pandemics

As of Sept. 25, 2021, the global coronavirus pandemic has killed 700,000 Americans and over 4.5 million worldwide. In doing so, the pandemic contributed to a worldwide recession. Racial-group membership determines whom is most at risk to exposure and dying from COVID. In the USA and globally, concerns about surviving the pandemic coincides with increased awareness and worry about the police's disproportionate use of lethal force against citizens of African descent in countries such as the United States, Columbia, France, and Great Britain.

A deep concern for the public health and the safety of socially vulnerable people is leading religious leaders and laity to participate in social forums, protest marches, and contacting elected officials that places a high priority on the social welfare, health, and safety of communities. There is evidence of increased online Zoom congregational meetings about racial tolerance, friendships across racial and ethnic lines, as well what must be done to eradicate racialized policing and surveillance. Moreover, multinational entities such as the United Nations, Target, General Motors, and the World Council of Churches, the U.S. Department of State are publicly avowing to support anti-racism policies.

That said, we encourage proposals that examine the role that religion plays in the position that individuals and groups take on these and other quality of life issues in the USA and globally. We also encourage proposals that examine the degree to which religion influence individual and collective behaviors in response to said issues. We are particularly interested in how race, class, citizenship, and nationality determine the saliency of religion to how individuals think and respond to the pandemic, anti-Black police violence, and other quality of life issues. We, of course, welcome proposals on any topic on the scientific study of religion.

Submissions Open: February 15, 2022
