I-1 RRA: Training Seminar: Using Field Experiments to Study Religion I

Room: Partagas 1

Instructor: Bradley Wright, University of Connecticut (bradley.wright@uconn.edu)

Field experiments, despite their many benefits, are rarely used in the study of religion. This training seminar will teach about field experiments and how to apply them to the study of religion. Topics include defining and understanding the use of field experiments, evaluating the feasibility and ethics of applying them to the study of religion, and how to design a doable, powerful religion field experiments. We will brainstorm research designs that you can use in your own research. This is a two-session seminar (8:00–11:15 am).

SSSR STUDENT PAPER AWARD NOMINATIONS

In 2016, SSSR's Council adopted the recommendation of the ad hoc committee on the Student Paper Award to select the best student paper award after the annual meeting. The criteria for the award are included below.

Purpose: To recognize the best paper scheduled for presentation by a student at the annual meeting. SSSR wishes to encourage scholarly work and participation by students in SSSR meetings.

Qualifications: Authors of papers nominated and submitted for this competition must be graduate or undergraduate students at institutions of higher learning anywhere in the world, but papers must be submitted in English. Any co-authors must also be students.

Neither faculty nor post-doctoral co-authors are permitted. Those who recently received the Ph.D. degree may apply if the paper was written while still a graduate student. Each author may submit only one paper to this competition.

Eligibility: To be eligible, a paper must not have been published or accepted for publication. At least one author for the paper must be registered for the SSSR conference.

Procedures: Nominations may be submitted through the SSSR website (sssreligion.org). Any current member of SSSR may nominate worthy student papers to the Student Paper Award Committee. Students may self-nominate. The Committee chair will notify the student presenter of their nomination.

Deadline: The deadline to submit a completed paper is May 1, 2019.

Format: Although the version of the paper prepared for oral presentation is usually limited to what can be communicated in 15 minutes, the written version submitted by May 1 for the award should be of normal length for published articles: approximately 35 pages, double-spaced, including notes and references. Papers should be submitted to the chair of the Committee (see sssreligion.org) as an email attachment in one of the following formats: MS Word (.doc), PDF, or rich text format (.rtf).

Criteria: Student papers will be judged by the awards committee on criteria normally used in evaluating scholarly and scientific papers for publication—namely, an appropriate theoretical framework, a competent use of research methods and data as necessary, with a persuasive argument to a logical conclusion. Papers may build upon any theoretical or research tradition. It will be up to the author(s) to demonstrate the cogency and usefulness of the theories and methods used in the paper.

Award: The award will be presented at the annual meeting. It includes a plaque and $1000.

RELIGIOUS RESEARCH ASSOCIATION

CALL FOR PAPERS

Annual Meeting, October 25-27, 2019
Hyatt Regency St. Louis at the Arch

Engaging with Scholarly Research on Religion

Since its inception, members of the Religious Research Association have studied religion from a variety of academic disciplines, using a broad range of social scientific methodologies. Our findings have profound implications, not only for religious leaders and practitioners, but also for the larger public sphere. Societies today face challenges of increased religious heterogeneity, contested boundaries between religious freedom and state authority, increasing suspicion of religious institutions, and a host of other concerns. Often, however, potential audiences are unaware of our research and how it could inform the challenges they face. In part, this may be because other, as yet unstudied, issues occupy their attention, or it may be due to a lag in our ability to use newer media outlets to disseminate our research. The 2019 RRA annual meeting will explore how we can bridge the gap between the religious challenges facing denominations and societies today, and a more widespread awareness of how our research could assist in addressing them.

Individual paper, panels, and author-meets-critics sessions are welcome at this meeting on all topics related to the social dimensions of religion and particularly on topics related to applied and organizational aspects of religion, which reflect the traditional focus of the RRA. In addition to sharing research findings, this call also encourages presenters to share experiences, strategies, and best practices in disseminating research to applied audiences.

Key topics for this meeting include, but are not limited to, the following:

- How has public discourse on religion changed in the United States in recent years? What impact have the 2016 presidential election and recent Supreme Court decisions had on discussions of religion in the public sphere?
- How have churches and denominations reacted to the increased public suspicion of societal and religious institutions, such as in the news media? How do demographics (race, gender, education, among others) factor into these reactions and responses?
- In what ways do media outlets, both religious and secular, engage with scholarly research? What can scholars do to disseminate their ideas beyond the academic world?
- How have you seen your own research used in the public sphere? Have you made purposeful efforts to get your research into the hands of “ordinary” people, and if so, how?
- How does social media impact scholarly research and dissemination on religion? Does social media introduce new tools or data sources to study religion from different perspectives?
- What is the relationship between the topics academics study and the topics religious congregations are interested in? Does scholarly research contribute to change on local levels?

Please submit the paper and session proposals through the online portal at www.sssreligion.org, choosing the RRA option on the submission form.

Submissions of sessions and individual paper proposals opens on February 1, 2019.
Submissions close on March 31, 2019. Decision notification is on April 30, 2019.

Please direct questions to the 2019 RRA Program Chair, Gina Zurlo, at gzurlo@bu.edu.

SOCIETY FOR THE SCIENTIFIC STUDY OF RELIGION

CALL FOR PAPERS
Annual Meeting, October 25 – 27, 2019
Hyatt Regency St. Louis at the Arch

Diversifying the Social Scientific Study of Religion: The Next Seventy Years

At a time of unparalleled communication among societies; at a time when religion holds both the power to bring conflict and the power to bring peace; at a time when pluralism and globalization are recasting what it means to study religion; it is the right time to celebrate and champion nuanced diversity in the social scientific study of religion. We need studies that bring together scholars from different social locations and different disciplines in service of a deeper understanding of diversity. We need studies that examine how religion sits alongside, influences, and is influenced by other social locations, identities and institutions: social locations such as race, social class, gender, sexuality or institutions such as science, education, the criminal justice system, examples of a few of the many social locations and institutions where religion is important. We need studies that examine different nation and state contexts. We need studies that compare different religious traditions as well as understand the varieties of non-religion. We need studies that examine diverse publics as well as initiatives, which translate our research to and receive feedback from diverse publics. As we both critically examine the past while charting the vision for the future of the social scientific study of religion we invite papers and panels that address some aspect of diversity in the social scientific study of religion.

Submissions Open: February 1, 2019

Submissions Close: March 31, 2019

Decision Notification: April 30, 2019

Please submit individual paper, panels, and author-meets-critics proposals through the online portal at www.sssreligion.org, choosing the SSSR option on the submission form.
